Last year the Lackawanna Railroad transported for the use of Greater New York a daily average of 8874 cases of bottled milk containing 12 bottles to the case and 8290 cans of loose milk and cream containing 40 quarts to the can. This is equal to 60 solid carloads of milk every day in the year, or seven or eight trainloads of average length. These trains are operated on fast schedules by the same powerful locomotives that haul the passenger flyers.

The Lackawanna handles 15% of New York's huge supply and reaches out as far as Richfield Springs, N. Y., two hundred and ninety-five miles away, in order to satisfy the City's demands.

Milk on the Lackawanna is carried in refrigerator cars constructed for milk traffic exclusively. It is thoroughly iced in order to conform to the New York Health Department rule that all milk must arrive at a temperature not higher than 50 degrees Fahrenheit.
